

Where is Your Data

his has got you thinking. Only yesterday, you shared a couple of photos of your first day on the job with a few of your close friends. But that should be OK, right? Let's see...

1. You took some photos at work on your mobile phone. Copies of these photos are now available on your mobile device.
2. You shared these with five close friends, who live in various locations across the world.
3. All of your friends downloaded the photos and now have copies of your photos on their devices.
4. One of your friends was so proud that they decided to post and share your photos online. The photos are no longer just on your device. They have in fact ended up on servers located in different parts of the world and people whom you don't even know now have access to your photos.